No Man is Stronger Than His Stomach A strong man is strong all over. No man can be strong who is suffering from weak stomach with its consequent indigestion, or from some other disease of the stomach and its associated organs, which impairs digestion and nutrition. For when the stomach is weak or-diseased there is a loss of the nutrition contained in food, which is the source of all physical strength. When a man "doesn't feel just right," when he doesn't sleep well, has an uncomfortable feeling in the stomach after eating, is languid, nervous, irritable and despondent, he is losing the nutrition needed to make strength Such a man should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other argans of digestion and nutrition. In Signed Article, the Ex-President Defends Gov. Hughes's Plan.

New York, Jufy 7 .- Former president Roosevel, deals with governor Hughes, the New York legislature, and primary reform in a signed editorial article in the current number of The Outlook. Mr. Roosevelt writes in part as fol-

"I lelieve that governor Hughes has sen supported by the bulk of the wisest and most disinterested opinion as regards most of his measures and positions, and I think that this has been markedly the case as regards primary cominations.

"I know that many honest and sincere men are on principle opposed to governor Hughes on this point and I know also that the proposed reform vill very possibly accomplish less than ts extreme advocates expect. Put I nevertheless feel in the first place that on the fundamental issue of direct primary nominations, the gov-ernor is right, and in the second place that as the measure finally came up for action in the state legislature, it was well nigh free from all objections save those of the men who object to it because they are fundamentally opposed

CENTRAL AMERICA MAY MAKE PROTEST

Madriz Protests at the Attitude of the United States.

Washington, D. C., July 7 .- That at least three and perhaps more of the Central and South American republics will make a concerted protest of some kind at the coming international conference of American states at Buenos Ayres against the Central American policy of the United States, is the possibility being discussed.

"According to international law," said Madriz in a note to his consul at Washington, "no neutral government may impede or disturb in time of war, legitimate military operations of bellig-erents. Foreigners equally with natives, are subject to the contingencies Madriz not only meant this to be com nunicated to American officials, but has protested to every Central and South American government against the attitude of the United States. On the diplomacy of the American delegates to the conference may depend largely the outcome of the matter.

Iruxton King By George Barr
McCutchen A Story Of

Copyright, 1909, by George Barr McCutcheoz- Copyright, 1909, by Dodd, Mead & Company,

SYNOPSIS OF FIRST CHAPTER. Truxton King, an American million aire's son, tired of the humdrum life and sets out to have some adventures He reaches the kingdom of Graustark.

(Continued From Yesterday. A young lady in a rajah silk gown, a flimsy panama hat tilted well over her nose with a red feather that stood erect as if always in a state of surprise, turned the bushes and came to a stop almost at King's elbow. He had and that she was staring up into his face with amazed gray eyes. Afterward he was to realize that she was amazingly pretty; that her teeth were very white and even; that her eyes were the most beautiful and expressive he had ever seen, that she was slender and imperious and that there were dimples in her cheeks so fascinating that he could not gather sufficient strength of purpose to withdraw his Eric Vos Engo." Truxton's look turned gaze from them. Of course he did not see them at the outset. She was not

The prince came to the rescue. "This is my Aunt Loraine, Mr .- Mr."- He swallowed hard and looked helpless.

"King," supplied Truxton-"Truxton King, your highness." Then, with all the courage he could produce, he said to the beautiful lady: "I'm as guilty as | he. See!" He pointed ruefully to four goldfish which he had strung upon wire grass and dropped into the edge of the pool.

"Please put those poor little things back in the pool, Mr. King," said the lady in perfect English.

"Gladly, with the prince's permission," said King, also in English. The prince looked glum, but Interposed no imperial objection.

It must be confessed that King's composure was sorely disturbed. He glanced up to find her studying him, plainly perplexed.

"I just wandered in here," he began guiltily. "The prince captured me somewhat dazed and by no means sure down there by the big tree." "Did you say your name is Truxton King?" she asked somewhat skeptical-

THE COMMITTEE OF TEN. T has been said before that Truxton King was the unsuspecting object of interest to two sets of watchers The fact that he was under the surveillance of the government police is not surprising when we consider the evident thoroughness of that department, but that he should be continually watched by persons of a more sinister cast suggests a mys- powerful ruler of an empire learned speculative interest. The committee of ten represented the brains and the activity of a rabid coterie in Edelweiss, among themselves styled the Party of Equals. In plain language, they were "reds."

The nominal leader was William Spantz, he who had a son in the prince's household, Julius Spantz, the master of arms. Far off in the hills above the Danube there lived the real leader of this deadly group-the Iron Count Marianx, exile from the land of his birth, bated and execrated by every loyal Graustarkian, hating and execrating in return with a tenfold greater venom.

Olga Platanova was the latest acquisition to this select circle. A word concerning her: She was the daughter of Professor Platanova, one time oculist and sociologist in a large German university. He had been one of the most brilliant men in Europe and a member of a noble family. Less than a year before the opening of this tale he was executed for treason and conspiracy against the empire. His daughter, Olga, was recognized as one of the most beautiful and cultured young women in Warsaw. Her suitors seemed to be without number. Finally there came one who conquered and was beloved. He was the son of a mighty duke, a prince of the blood. The young prince pledged himself to marry her despite all opposition; he was ready to give up his noble inheritance for the sake of love. The all iting a certain underground room un- horrified. Olga Piatanova was cast aside, but not forgotten. He became the husband of an unloved, scrawny lady of diadems. When the situation beame more than he could bear he blew out his brains.

When Olga heard the news of his death she was not stricken by grief. She cried out her joy to a now cloudless sky, for he had justified the great love that had been theirs and would be theirs to the end of time.

From a passive believer in the doctrines of her father and his circle she became at once their most impassioned exponent. She threw herself heart and soul into the deliberations and transactions of the great red circle; her father understood and yet was amazed.

Then he was put to death by the class she had come to hate-one more stone in the sepulcher of her tender, girlish ideals. When the time came she traveled to Graustark in response to the call of the committee of ten; she came prepared to kill the creature she would be asked to kill. And yet down in her heart she was sore afraid. She was there not to kill a man grown old in wrongs to her people, but to destroy the life of a gentle, innocent boy of seven!
